

EDITORIAL

Power of Passion

Dr Shehzad Saleem

Passion is a very commendable trait. People who are passionate in their work can achieve great success. It can produce results beyond our imagination and bring about substantial changes in our lives and the lives of those around us.

If we are in any way lacking in passion, we must not think that we are lazy or apathetic individuals. It is only that we have not struck the right chord. As soon as we discover our aptitude and interest or if already discovered, put it to use, passion lights up in us as if it just needed a spark to kindle it.

Each of us is born with some talent which can be termed as our passion. We relish it when we use it. We even lose track of time. It is therefore just a question of self-discovery. It will make us spring into action and will indeed need restraint to control it.

Another thing which can help discovering our passion is to live in the company of passionate people, for passion sure is contagious and weaves a spell on those around.

Once passion is kindled in our field of interest, at times it can be put to use in other fields too because results are something which induce more passion and enhance it to a great degree.

Once of the greatest passions a human being can really benefit from is the passion for seeking the truth and changing oneself in accordance with one's discovery. Passion can also help us to become good human beings who place others before themselves and like to help those around them.

Passion and zeal do not allow us to give up easily or to resign ourselves to tough circumstances. They make us rise after every fall and start again in the wake of failures.

Passion makes us achieve difficult targets and think of out of the box solutions for complex problems.

Passion makes us a warm and welcoming person who is always accessible to others when they need us.

So let us passionately discover our passion!